True Crime Writings in Colonial India Shampa

Roy, 2020-08-10 The emergent culture of crime writings in late 19th century colonial Bengal (India) is an interesting testimony to how literature is shaped by various material forces including the market. This book deals with true crime writings of the late 1800s published by 'lowbrow publishing houses' — infamous for publishing 'sensational' and the 'vulgar' literature — which had an avid bhadralok (genteel) readership. The volume focuses on select translations of true crime writings by Bakaulah and Priyanath Mukhopadhyay who worked as darogas (Detective Inspectors) in the police department in mid-late nineteenth century colonised Bengal. These published accounts of cases investigated by them are among the very first manifestations of the crime genre in India. The writings reflect their understandings of criminality and guilt, as well as negotiations with colonial law and policing. Further, through a selection of cases in which women make an appearance either as victims or offenders, (or sometimes as both,) this book sheds light on the hidden gendered experiences of the time, often missing in mainstream Bangla literature. Combining a love for suspense with critical readings of a cultural phenomenon, this book will be of much interest to scholars and researchers of comparative literature, translation studies, gender studies, literary theory, cultural studies, modern history, and lovers of crime fiction from all disciplines.

The Splintered Divine Spencer L. Allen, 2015-03-05 This book investigates the issue of the singularity versus the multiplicity of ancient Near Eastern deities who are known by a common first name but differentiated by their last names, or geographic epithets. It focuses primarily on the Ištar divine names in Mesopotamia, Baal names in the Levant, and Yahweh names in Israel, and it is structured around four key questions: How did the ancients define what it meant to be a god - or more pragmatically, what kind of treatment did a personality or object need to receive in order to be considered a god by the ancients? Upon what bases and according to which texts do modern scholars determine when a personality or object is a god in an ancient culture? In what ways are deities with both first and last names treated the same and differently from deities with only first names? Under what circumstances are deities with common first names and different last names recognizable as distinct independent deities, and under what circumstances are they merely local manifestations of an overarching deity? The conclusions drawn about the singularity of local manifestations versus the multiplicity of independent deities are specific to each individual first name examined in accordance with the data and texts available for each divine first name.

The Emergence of Technopolis Robert

Preer, 1992-05-30 This study examines the rise of the technopolis--high technology-based regional development. It explores how and why these regions emerged and the policies that have been devised to promote them. The rapid, propulsive growth of the technopolis in the 1960s and 1970s caught many people by surprise. Silicon Valley arose in an agricultural area; Route 128 in a stagnant manufacturing region. Throughout the rest of the world, a new generation of regional development policies have appeared, the most common ones being science parks, small business incubators, and venture capital funds. This book surveys these policies from a comparative, critical perspective. It also develops a theoretical framework for understanding why regional high-technology development occurs and the role policy can play in the process. This work will be of interest to development planners and scholars in the fields of economic geography, development economics, and regional development.

Cracked Spaces M. Miranda Maloney, 2021-07-31

Description of Cracked Spaces Space is an abstract perception of the world around us. It evokes a sense of freedom and spaciousness, and it is defined by the human ability to move, by the spatial location of the body to objects. However, space is also a place where the shadow of reality dwells- the abstract perception of lived experiences. Space is filled with the unseen, like air and all that travels with it. To people living in the borderland desert, space is a place; it is home. Cracked Spaces draws from spaces of memory and its vastness to reconstruct a compact and straightforward narrative of poetry, rooted in geography, social justice, displacement, migration, and love, that informs a life of living in physical and construct borders. Within this space, the poetic voice moves, locating the cracks from which these poems emerge.

Modeling and Daylighting Design of a New Window with Integrated Controllable Louver System

Qian Peng, 2009 Highly glazed building façades are increasingly popular in contemporary architecture, and as a result, new solar control technologies incorporated into advanced fenestration products are moving towards improved daylighting performance and more effective control of solar heat gain. Integrating advanced fenestration products into a building's façade design is considered as an effective way to conserve energy in commercial buildings. An advanced fenestration product, known as VisionControl®, integrates controllable aluminum louvers between two panes of glass, and is currently available on the market. This study starts by redesigning the VisionControl® window to reduce its overall thickness in order to enable its applications in commercial curtain walls and retrofit projects. The three-section façade concept is widely used in the commercial curtain wall industry as it provides view and daylight while controlling solar heat gain. This thesis presents a mathematical daylighting model developed based on a three-section curtain wall façade with the newly designed VisionControl® window installed on both the top and middle sections. The model represents separately the two window sections so that the middle and top section louvers can be independently controlled to maximize daylight transmission in the room while avoiding glare. This model is capable of estimating the workplane illuminance with the consideration of several important design parameters, such as building location, façade orientation, control strategy and window materials. Two experiments were conducted for this study. The visible transmittance of the newly designed VisionControl® window was measured in the first experiment. A custom-built testing device was designed to obtain accurate visible transmittance results with the consideration of different solar profile angles and louver tilt angles. Another experiment was conducted with a small scale office model to validate the mathematical daylighting model. Experimental results were compared with model-calculated results under three representative sky conditions. This comparison confirmed that the daylighting model can be utilized to estimate workplane illuminance with the newly designed VisionControl window with reasonable accuracy.

Thailand's International Meditation Centers

Brooke Schedneck, 2015-05-15 This book explores contemporary practices within the new institution of international meditation centers in Thailand. It discusses the development of the lay vipassana meditation movement in Thailand and relates Thai Buddhism to contemporary processes of commodification and globalisation. Through an examination of how meditation centers are promoted internationally, the author considers how Thai Buddhism is translated for and embodied within international tourists who participate in meditation retreats in Thailand. Shedding new light on the decontextualization of religious practices, and raising new questions concerning tourism and religion, this book focuses on the nature of cultural exchange, spiritual tourism, and religious choice in modernity. With an aim of reframing questions of religious modernity, each chapter offers a new perspective on the phenomenon of spiritual seeking in Thailand. Offering an analysis of why meditation practices appeal to non-Buddhists, this book contends that religions do not travel as whole entities but instead that partial elements resonate with different cultures, and are appropriated over time.
